

INDIAN BLACK TEAS – Assam & Darjeeling

Although the indigenous use of tea plants were reported in India over 1000 years ago, the principal of tea production and culture occurred in the 1800's when tea-thirsty Britain expanded tea production in its Indian colonies in response to Chinese trade embargoes. Assam and Darjeeling teas, named after their regions, are two of the most famous categories of Indian teas. Assam teas came to be known for their rich and malty character, strong enough to handle milk and sugar. Darjeeling teas are to be known, for their floral delicate notes.

HARMUTTY ASSAM

Full of golden tips, this classic Assam is both rich and floral. Produces a malty and sweeter cup of tea, which stands well with or without milk.
